

Local supply teacher agency success

In the current economic climate, it's great to hear of local businesses going from strength to strength.

First Class Supply & Training Ltd of Whitley Bay, a recruitment agency specialising in the placement of teachers and teaching assistants throughout the North East, are one such success story.

With their excellent reputation for partnering schools, they have become the preferred supplier for many schools throughout the region and particularly in North Tyneside. They offer an exceptionally cost effective service to schools, and are able to ensure their teachers and assistants are of a very high calibre.

In the past year, they have taken on three new staff which has helped maintain their reputation as a highly professional team with a personal and friendly touch. It has also ensured they are able to stay one step ahead of the legislation relating to Safeguarding Children and Safer Recruitment in Education.

Mavis Lowery, retired deputy headteacher of Marden High School, is a valued member of the team. She conducts interviews as part of the registration process and can offer help and advice to NQTs and experienced teachers new to supply.

She said: "I am proud to be a part of the First Class team and am delighted with the support we receive from our local schools. We look forward to continuing our partnerships throughout the following academic year."
